A FISSURE VEIN.

The reason why some persons fail in mining, while others succeed is very plain; the former observe the established principles of science, while the latter ig-nore them.

pistrict or the White Pine District in Nevada, or argentiferous galena in Vah; it may have been rich for ore for 200 feet in depth from the surface, and become suddenly worthless and expansed. When this occurs, it is explainable upon well-established scientific principles; the deposit was superficial, it was merely a mass of float rock carried there by the "diluvium" of former ages, and hence no one should ever have expected or promised permanency for it.

The fissure veins are continuous in "The assure veins are continuous in depth, and their metalliferous contents have not been found exhausted, or to have sensibly and permanently decreased at any depth which has yet been obtained by mining."

In further illustration of this subject,

In further illustration of this subject, the following is especially instructive, and, as it is contained in the United States official report on the Mineral Resources of the Rocky Mountains, transmitted to Congress March 5th, 1868, it is entitled to the highest confidene:

"The mother gold lode of the State of "The mother gold lode of the State of California is in many respects the most remarkable metalliferous fissure vein in the world. The gold is generally in fine particles, and is distributed evenly through a large portion of the lode in the pay chimneys, and there is very little of the rock entirely without gold. The width varies from a foot to thirty feet—that is, the main vein as worked; but it is accompanied by branches or companion veins, so that the total width of the vein matter is sometimes nearly a hundred feet. We do not find in our books mention of any similar auriferous deposit in any other countries."

As an evidence of the two characteristics of a fissure vein—viz: inexhaustability in depth and increasing richness

JEFFERSON DAVIS.—A Memphis letter to the Macon Messenger contains the following in regard to Mr. Davis: I have been spending the day with Jeffer-son Davis, and in his sunny little office on Madison street, we have been talking over the past of many years.

torical man. He had just returned from torical man. He had just returned from West Point, and wore the uniform of a calet. He was then a lithe, modest youth, whose deep gray eyes twinkled with the beauty and brilliancy of a star. His head was small, as it is yet, but admirably formed, and there was an intelligence in his features that gave promise of the feture he has fulfilled. That eye of the future he has fulfilled. That eye to-day beams with the steady light of a mental illumination rarely met with in one of his years and sorrows. Those teatures, once so radiant, are now sedate and wearing the cast of deep melancholy, save when animated with the spirit which yet burns in his bosom when excited by thought or conversation. Sometimes, too, the twinking of mirth dances in his eye and lights up his features. But soon the joyous smile fades into melancholy, which has become habitual. His health is good. He has but one sound eye. You know the vision of the other has long since one of his years and sorrows. Those He has but one sound eye. You know the vision of the other has long since faded into darkness. This defect forbids much reading or writing. Yet, to-day, in the familiarity of old friendship,

I remarked:
"I think, Mr. Davis, you will not loose the other eye until you shall have given to the world your views and opinons as to the cause which led to the

"I am writing," he said—and he drummed with his fingers upon the barze-covered table, upon which his arm rested, and the deep sadness which clouded his features and followed the clouded his features and followed the remark was painful to contemplate.

"You have just returned from a visit to Lamar, and contemplate a visit to Georgia, you tell me; say to Hardeman, and to Lamar, when again you see them, have a pleasant memory of them both; and further, tell them I am preparing a work with all the impartiality possible to me; and after years of sobor thought which shall not leave the world in darkness as to my motives and my conduct, or that of those who acted with me."—

Nothing is more usual in these "latter days" than for persons to purchase a "claim" and call it a "mine," Perhaps it may be simply a float deposit of silver-bearing ore in the Eureka District or the White Pine District in hency for it.

If any one desires to invest in a mine, which will be permanent and improve in waith as he descends upon the vein, let him invest in a "true fissure vein."

Professor Whitney, in his "Metallic Wealth of the United States," says:

Jas. Clancy Russell Scott K. J. Hanley Farl Hamilton Pat. Holland

istics of a lessure vein—viz: inexhaustability in depth and increasing richness in descent—take the Hayward Amador mine of California, situated upon the mother lode. This remarkable mine has paid over £2,000,000 to its owners, has been worked with increasing richness to its present depth of over 2,000 feet, the rock gradually rising in value from £2 to £5 per ton, and now at its depth of over 2,000 feet it is worth £6 per ton, and is worked for £1.

The same geological features are shown by the other gold mines on the mother lode in Amador County, California; but our object was to establish one single proposition—viz: fissure voins are permanent, float deposits are temporary, and the above is sufficient for this purpose.
